Do You Know Where Your Teen is Online?

Written by Alison Rhodes, The Safety Mom

I just finished reading an article which discusses a new feature that Facebook is going to be testing out in the UK. It's a "panic button" that teens can voluntarily place on their Facebook page. If they feel that someone is stalking them, they can hit the button and they will be connected with resources hosted by the Child Exploitation and Online Protection Centre. The teens can then report someone who they feel is acting inappropriately and be given tips on how to deal with online threats.

Business Comes at 'Right Time' for this Single Mom

Written by Sarah Lindenfeld Hall

"A few years ago, Lori Klein was a single mom of two kids wondering where to go next in her career. Klein had started out on Madison Avenue, working for a global advertising firm. her job took her as far awa as Istanbul. But now as she looked for ways to reenter the workforce, she knew she wanted and needed to stay much closer to home with kids, then ages 8 and 5. So she landed with RightTime Kids, a drop-off childcare center for kids ages 18 months to 12 years."

Funny Stories from YOUR Kids!

Here at RTK, we know you love hearing funny stories and sayings from the mouths of the little ones. Here is what has been keeping us laughing:

3 year old boy: "I want to be a BLUE pink flamingo!"

5 year old girl: "You better watch out because beavers will bite you with their sharp teeth if you disturb their dinner."

8 year old boy (after RTK staff fixes his Wii remote):
"Thanks, you're a lightsaber!"

We greatly value your opinions:
